

The America's adventure proved my expectations. Certainly i had a good time working in the camp and then travelling. It was my first experience being abroad and as it's turned out quite successful. ' Nobody will understand what i'm talking about in America!!!', i thought. Fortunately i was wrong. You shouldn't be afraid of speaking English, because they will understand you even in spite of your not good English grammar.

Well, few words about the camp Walden. It's located at the northern tip of Michigan's Lower Peninsula, eight miles south of Cheboygan. It's a traditional summer camp for kids. I'd say that it differs from Russian camps. There are so many activities from land and water sports to horseback riding; from rockets and radio to the visual and performing arts. Walden campers roast marshmallows, sing silly songs, star-gaze and drink "bug juice." And they also do less-traditional camp stuff, like mountain biking, gardening and yoga. Kids choose their own activity program and, with the guidance of a committed and highly professional staff, find out what it's like to be "on their own" for part of the summer.

After working for 2 months in the kitchen stuff i set out in the fascinating journey. The people in Chicago appeared quite different than in our town in northern Michigan, probably it depends on great number of tourists in Chicago. I was so amused by huge and high buildings, architecture, parks, monuments.

Boston. 4 days in the HI hostel . Lots of international students that came to study in Boston, various accents, meeting new friends, visiting fascinating places every time, pubs- crazy life! So cute!

New York, New York! The last city that i've visited in America. Busy but nevertheless kind people, like in the whole country. Stylish people, especially the citizens, luxury markets, overcrowded streets, incredible advertising posters, tourists with cameras, vast central Park and 5th avenue. Awesome!

Great times! Many new friends! Large pizzas! Crazy life! America, hope to see you once more!
